Paul Hoffman

Paul Hoffman is the owner of Hoffman Corporation, a design/build, Total Project Management™ firm based in Appleton, Wisconsin. The company, currently in its fourth generation, was founded in 1892.

In 1977, Paul responded to a changing industry and re-engineered the company, then primarily a bid general contractor. He began by diversifying the company’s turnkey services to include feasibility studies, architecture, engineering, land planning, development services, interior design, financial counsel, construction management, and property management.

Hoffman Corporation has remained on the cutting edge of the industry by providing its clients with creative problem solving and state-of-the-art computerized architecture. As a result of the company’s continued growth, success, and innovation, Hoffman Corporation was named to Arthur Andersen’s 1999 Wisconsin 100, honoring the 100 fastest growing companies in the State. The company also received Ernst & Young’s Company of the Year in 1998. Paul Hoffman was honored in 1998 with Ernst & Young’s prestigious “Entrepreneur of the Year”, and the Fox Cities Chamber of Commerce’s “Small Business Person of the Year” in 1991.

Paul is often cited as the reason people join Hoffman Corporation. He inspires those who work with him to achieve unprecedented results. Relying on the company’s Mission Statement, guiding principles, and a group of extraordinary talent to support him, Paul prefers to take risks, think huge, and explore all the possibilities. He encourages and inspires those he encounters to do the same.

In addition to Hoffman Corporation, Paul is co-owner of Quality Building Services, Inc. and Providence Construction, LLC, as well as a managing partner in several other business affiliations.

Paul’s community involvement includes serving on several non-profit and business boards, having at one time served on up to 14 community boards simultaneously.
